The success of a small project in Portsmouth led Romsey-based Spaceway to play a key role in the refit of the headquarters of one of the UK's fastest growing companies.

Nature's Way Foods asked Spaceway to provide full height partitioning and to create a meeting room at its Blueprint Portsmouth factory - and were so impressed with the speed and quality of the work they then commissioned the company to help in the refitting of the main headquarters building in Selsey.

Spaceway's Peter Upton worked closely with John Brown Architects and main contractor GWP Partnership. Part of the contract involved the creation of a full height faceted glass partitioning for a number of offices.

Nature's Way Foods, which processes and packs salads for major retail outlets, is delighted with the end result.

Project engineer Gary Kilhams said: " Our company is very go-ahead and we wanted an environment that reflected our aspirations - with the help of Spaceway we have achieved these objectives."
