When Honeywell Avionics Systems needed additional storage space for their staff to store their personal belongings they called in the experts, Spaceway South.

Romsey-based Spaceway were asked to design and install storage combination lockers for staff and four work benches in the despatch area.

They rose to the challenge by supplying 142 single-tier combination lockers with storage for small personal belongings and a garment hanging system.

Honeywell Avionics is part of the Honeywell Control Systems Ltd which is a world-wide company based in the States. With its UK head office based in Bracknell, it is a service and repair facility for aircraft instruments, specifically the control and management systems.

Spaceway South completed both tasks within the required timescale. They planned and installed a complete personal locker system in two rooms, one of them being a completely refurbished area. The second job was to supply and build four specialist work benches for the goods in and despatch area.

"The work that Spaceway South has done for Honeywell Avionics is of the highest quality," said David Reed, Facilities Manager at Honeywell. "Spaceway South completed both tasks within the required timescale and the service given by Spaceway South and Charlie Jeary was extremely efficient and professional."
